Good with Words: Writing and Editing

Perhaps the most important thing students and professionals of all kinds can do to improve their effectiveness is embrace the following advice: become good with words. This series of courses targeted the writing side of that recommendation. The skills it focused on included (1) how to arrange a complex set of information in a reader-friendly way (2) how to use compelling details to make a point (3) how to punctuate and paragraph like a professional (4) how to add nuance to sentences and slogans (5) how to manage short-term and long-term projects (6) how to give and receive high-quality feedback.

Patrick J. Barry, Clinical
Assistant Professor of Law, University of
Michigan Law School
